The South Seas.

The Cooktown Herald has been supplied with the following information by Captain Sachse, of the s.s. Pacific (one of Herstein and Co.'s trading fleet) as to recent outrages in the South Seas: "On the 7th April last the Pacific arrived at Hermit Island, where Herstein & Co. had established a copra station in charge of a European trader. At half-past 10 A.M. on that day the vessel came to anchor within 150 yards of the shore, when it was seen that the station had been burned to the ground. Within a few minutes afterwards a rifle and musket fire was opened from each side of the bay and from the front landing, by foes who were concealed in the mangrove scrub and behind trees. The bullets hulled the vessel, and whistled over her so rapidly and so uncomfortably close to the men's heads that they were unable to weigh anchor in response to the captain's command. Fire was returned by the crew, but ineffectually, as the presence of an enemy was only indicated by the report of their rifles, and their whereabouts only by the puffs of smoke accompanying the discharge. Finding that the leader had prevented him from weighing his anchor, Capt. Sachse put on full steam and dragged it beyond rifle range, when he examined damages, found no one hurt, and only the topsides perforated with bullets, but not to any great or dangerous depth."

On the 21st of the same month the s.s. Friar, also belonging to Herstein & Co., from Hongkong to Mutupi, called at Hermit Island, and the captain with a boat's crew proceeded to land. There was no sign or sound to betoken the presence of an enemy; but no sooner had the captain jumped on shore than a volley rang out from the mangrove scrub, and he was stretched lifeless on the beach, with five or six bullets in his body. The boat's crew backed water, and pushed off at once, receiving in their retreat two volleys from eight or ten natives, who came down to the water-edge and fired, some 17 bullets passing through the planking of the boat, although, fortunately, without much damage. The mate took charge of the vessel, and took her on to Mutupi. One of the seamen in the boat was shot through the left thigh, the bullet lodging in his abdomen; but although his was at first considered a fatal case, he was rapidly progressing to health and strength when Captain Sachse left Mutupi.

Filial Respect.

The other day one of the clerks in a Washington street store discovered the porter crammed among the boxes with pen, ink and paper before him.

"So you're writing a letter, eh, Collins?" queried the clerk.

"Yes, I'm writing to the old man; he lives out in Buffalo."

So saying, he handed up the half written letter for inspection; and after he had perused it the clerk remarked—

"I see you spell jug 'gug,' now that isn't right, Collins."

"Of course not," replied the porter; "but you see I am writing to the old man, and he always spells it that way. If I put two 'g's' on he would think that I was putting on style over him, and forgetting that I saw his son. He's good hearted, and I don't want to hurt his feelings."

So the letter went off with only one "g" at the end of "gug."
